

Individually, we are one drop. Together, we are an ocean.
–Ryunosuke Sator

LETTER FROM THE EDITORS:

Now in its 11th year, the Graduate Student Journal of Psychology (GSJP) has made great progress in its efforts to bring student research to the forefront. As with past editors of the GSJP, we began this academic year with several ideas on how to improve upon the previous issue. And much to our delight, the journal's increased exposure (across the U.S. and Canada) and growing number of article submissions called for organizational restructuring. We were quick to identify areas within our editorial process that could be streamlined. While maintaining the intrinsic excitement and charm of a student group, we adopted a structured management style putting into place our first editorial board. Our editors began work on their respective divisions at the very beginning of the academic year fulfilling their responsibilities assiduously as the year progressed.

It is our belief that the benefits of implementing a formal structure to our process are evident in this final product – Volume 11. Submissions were reviewed, re-reviewed, copy-edited, and formatted in a seamless sequence yielding one of the journal's most diverse volumes ranging from The Physiology of Psychotherapy to Neuroscience and the Law. The breadth and depth of the articles in this issue reflects the focused effort of every member of our dedicated editorial board. Of course, we also greatly value the work of our contributing authors, not only for their important and interesting research, but also for their commitment and cooperation throughout this journey. Finally, we would like to acknowledge our faculty advisor and Director of Clinical Training, Dr. Barry Farber, who has been the cornerstone of our journalistic endeavors providing sage advice and support while encouraging independent decision-making.

Going forward, we plan to keep enhancing the journal and expanding our readership, and in so doing, adding to GSJP's brilliant legacy. We hope you enjoy the final product of our combined efforts as much as we did producing it.

Brian J. Sherman
Editor-in-Chief

Anitha Venkataramani-Kothari
Editor-in-Chief